

Short Bio:

Giulio Mela is an environmental economist at Ricerca sul Sistema Energetico. He received a M.Sc. in Management, Economics and Consumer Studies – Economics, Environment and Policy from Wageningen University in 2008 and a PhD in Land, Environment, Resources and Health, specialization Economics from the University of Padua in 2013. In the past, he worked at the Italian Institute of Agricultural Economics (INEA) and, as a post-doc in agricultural and environmental economics, at the Catholic University of Milan. Current research interests include natural resource use, externality and ecosystem services evaluation, effects of active mobility on health, cost-benefit analysis, and socio-economic assessment of policy measures in the energy sector.